Taking it Personally:
Why Gender Violence
is an Issue for Men

October 22, 2019

6:30 to 8:30 p.m.

Austin Auditorium
LaSells Stewart Center

This speaker is part of (Re)Vision Week, a series of events at Oregon State University focused on shifting norms around college drinking and sexual violence, and is co-sponsored by Samaritan Health Services and Sarah's Place. Open to the OSU community and general public. Accommodations for disabilities may be made by contacting Todd Cross at todd.cross@oregonstate.edu.

JACKSON KATZ, Ph.D. is an American educator, author, filmmaker and cultural theorist who is internationally renowned for his influential work in gender violence prevention and critical media literacy. He co-founded the Mentors in Violence Prevention program at Northeastern University's Center for the Study of Sport in Society in 1993, which pioneered a mixed-gender, multiracial, bystander approach that has been widely implemented in sexual and relationship abuse prevention programs. Katz and his colleagues have been centrally involved in the development of system-wide bystander intervention training in the U.S. Air Force and Navy. He speaks extensively in the U.S. and around the world on violence, media and multiracial, multinational masculinities topics.
